

Gender and HIV/AIDS

Addressing gender issues is essential to the success of HIV/AIDS programs. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender. Addressing gender issues is essential to the success of HIV/AIDS programs. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender.

PEPFAR Gender Strategies

Increasing gender equity in HIV/AIDS programs and services These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender.

Reducing violence and coercion Men and women are often affected by violence and coercion. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender.

Addressing male norms and behaviors Men and women are often affected by violence and coercion. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender.

Increasing women's legal protection Men and women are often affected by violence and coercion. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender.

Increasing women's access to income and productive resources Men and women are often affected by violence and coercion. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender. These programs are designed to provide equitable access to HIV prevention, treatment, and care for all people, regardless of gender.

